What We Are Learning At Bernheim

Horticulture, land management, arts, and education, are all part of Bernheim's mission to connect people with nature. While each of these areas is a separate discipline, in practice, it is more accurate to think of them as "lenses," that is, different ways of looking at and understanding nature.

Horticulture
Horticulture's original definition was "the culture of garden plants." But Bernheim's engagement in the natural world goes far beyond that. Bernheim houses an extensive horticultural collection, which serves as a major scientific and educational resource. Bernheim shares this resource with members of the horticultural industry, in the hopes that they will find the newest and best plant varieties and use them in the field.

At the same time, Bernheim's dedication to exploration means that this collection is also a tribute to genetic diversity, and a refuge for endangered plants. The horticultural collection at Bernheim aids the staff in experimenting with the development of hybrids, as well as preserving endangered plant species.

Land Management
In land management, Bernheim strives to be a steward of the earth. On the Bernheim grounds, it has restored a number of natural

THE STORY OF ISAAC WOLFE BERNHEIM

Founder of Bernheim Arboretum & Research Forest

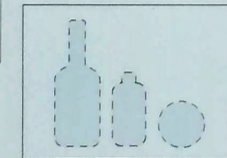

Isaac Wolfe Bernheim was a German immigrant professor who made his fortune in the Kentucky smoking business.

When he was 31, Mr. Bernheim decided to leave the Kentucky land that had enriched him by creating a remarkable natural preserve that incorporated the arts, education, natural areas management, and horticulture.

The Bernheim Arboretum and Research Forest opened officially in 1950. In the years since then, the natural vision of Isaac Bernheim has inspired more and more people. Over 200,000 visitors a year participate in educational programs and/or exhibits, nature-oriented recreation, horticulture, natural areas research, or simply find a place to reflect.

Mr. Bernheim did not begin his life a rich man. For nature always was a part of his life.

Si nulla e dat, ut vix, potestas reddi, sine vilis, chartis personis quibus scriptis animis, scriptis abbas animis certum qui dicitur, cum perhibens conuictus ortus dicitur in acie vixi scriptis animis? Eadem et magna hinc, "Et vixi scriptis personis, certum qui per hoc animis?" Quod, qui dicitur animis uno.

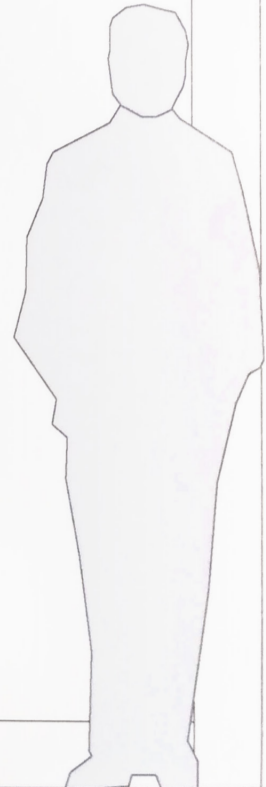

Si nulla e dat, ut vix, potestas reddi, sine vilis, chartis personis quibus scriptis animis.

Bernheim Arboretum and Research Forest, Kentucky's official arboretum, encompasses 14,000 acres and features a nationally recognized arboretum, nature center, large expanses of scenic natural area, 35 miles of hiking trails and a research forest.

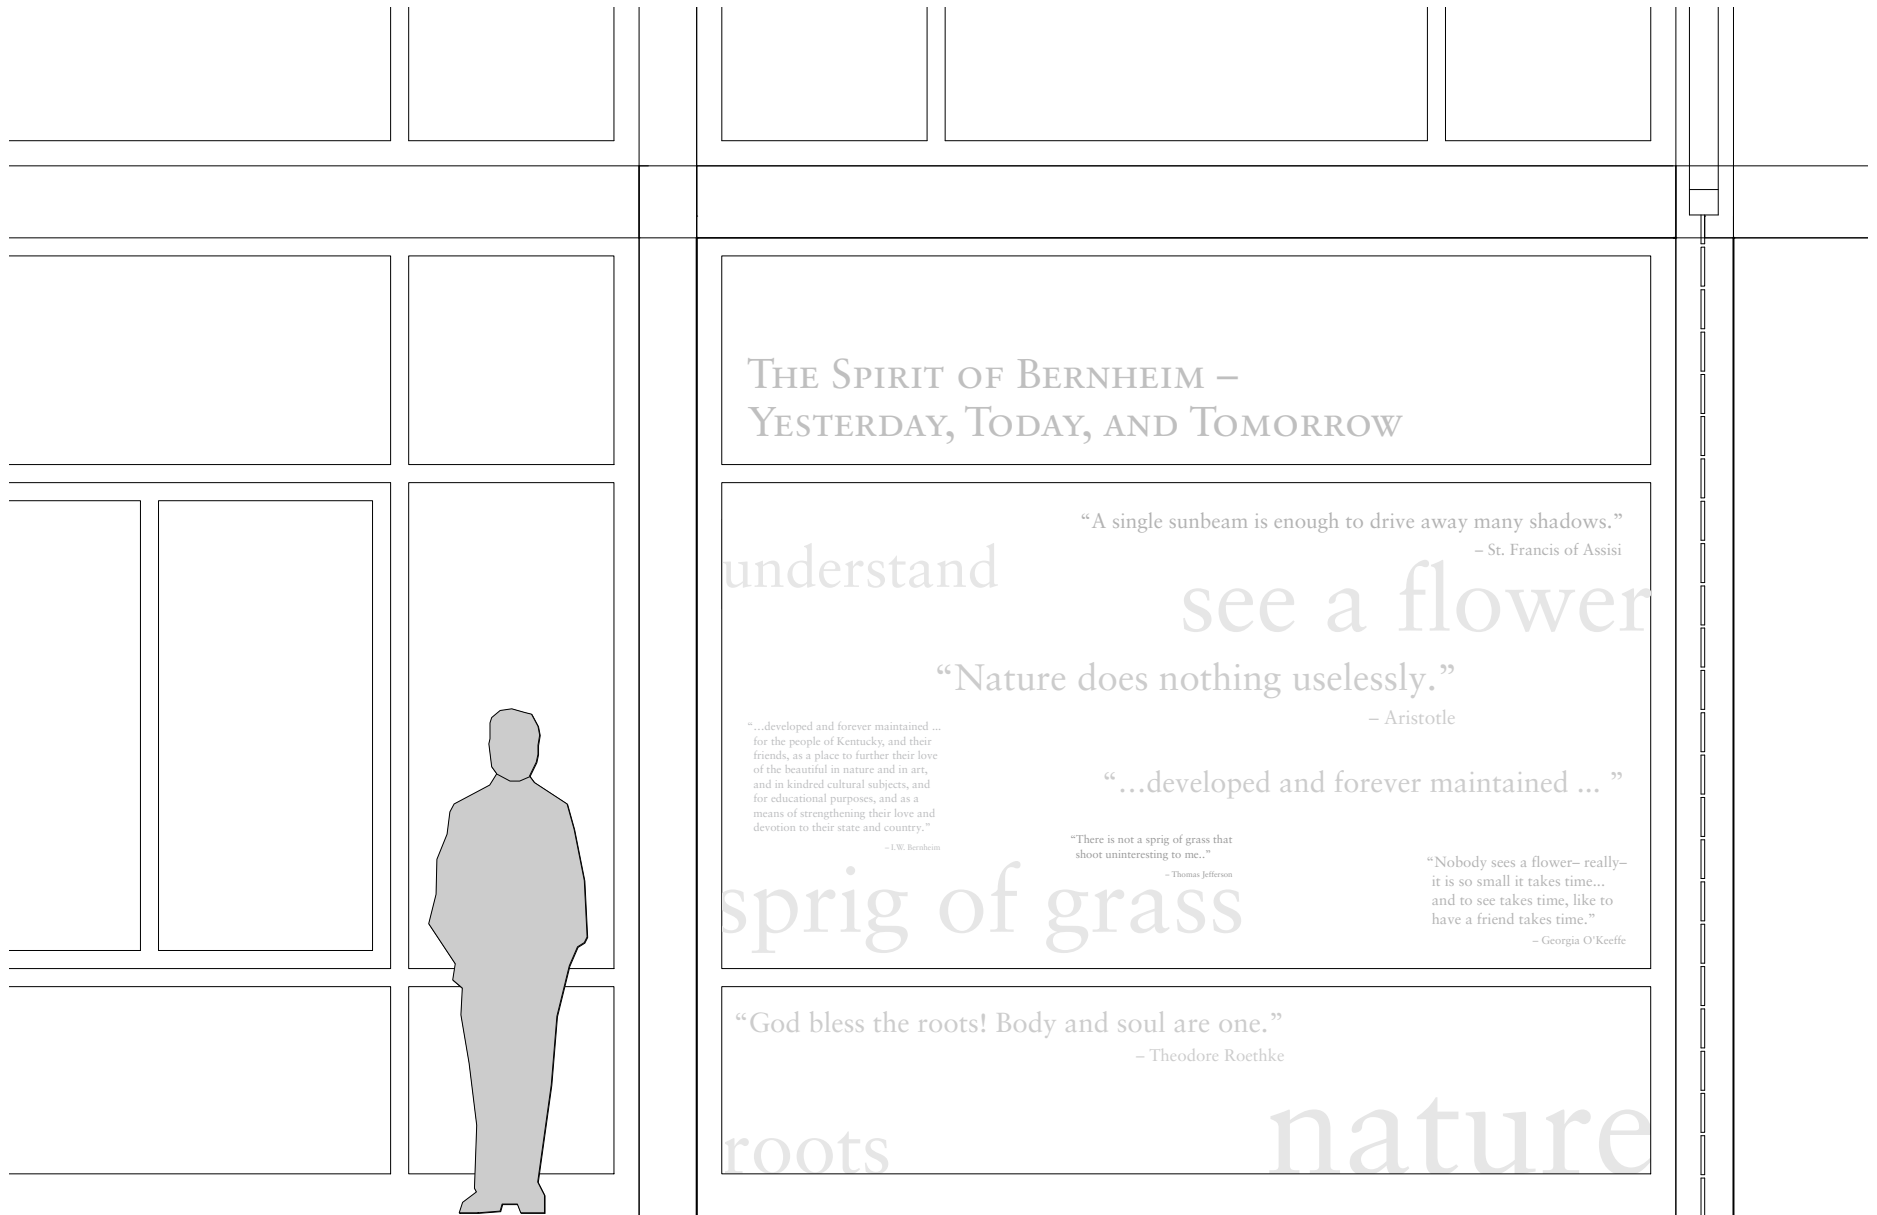

The goal of Bernheim, though expressed in many ways, is a single one: to connect nature with people's everyday lives.
